

Jamaica Poised to Roll Out Jam-Dex E-Currency Nationally

Country gets legislative greenlight to broaden Jam-Dex reach
Nation joins Bahamas, Eastern Caribbean Central Bank with CBCD
By Jim Wyss

(Bloomberg) -- Jamaica lawmakers have given final approval for the national debut of Jam-Dex, the country’s central bank digital currency. The country’s Senate passed the required legislation on June 3, following the House of Representatives’ approval last month.

The Caribbean nation began a phased rollout of Jam-Dex on May 11, but needed the measure to pass the legislature before circulating the e-currency more broadly. Governments around the world have been exploring the benefits of sovereign e-cash.

Jam-Dex will allow more people to participate in the financial system and boost transactions, said Minister of Foreign Affairs, Senator Kamina Johnson Smith. “It is instant and doesn’t come with cash handling fees,” she said in a statement. Households and businesses will be able to use the CBDC “to make payments and to hold value.”

Jamaica joins the Bahamas and the Eastern Caribbean Central Bank in issuing digital fiat currency.
